WORKING PAPERS

The Role of Energy Efficiency in Productivity: Evidence from Canada (Job Market Paper)

Abstract: This paper quantifies how the misallocation of energy, capital, and labor across provinces and sectors reduces productivity in Canada. Using annual provincial input–output data (2014–2020) and a standard Hsieh–Klenow–style framework, I decompose the loss into interprovincial (within-sector) and intersectoral (within-province) components and measure each input’s contribution. Unlike most studies focusing on firm-level variation within manufacturing, I examine the full economy at the province–sector level. The results show that misallocation drags aggregate productivity 5–8% below its efficient potential, depending on the assumed substitutability of goods between provinces. Within-sector misallocation drives most of the loss, reaching 4.3%, while between-sector misallocation contributes up to 4%, consistently less than the within-sector component, indicating interprovincial misallocation is the primary source. While energy accounts for only 8% of input costs, it makes up as much as 1.5% of the gap—comparable to capital’s 1.8% peak and substantially exceeding that of labor’s 0.8%—highlighting energy’s key role in productivity.

RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

Prof. Alaz Munzur Canadian Climate Policy Partnership, Calgary, AB, Canada 2025

- Coded and implemented a general equilibrium trade model for scenario analysis.

Prof. Trevor Tombe Department of Economics, Calgary, AB, Canada 2021, 2024

- Conducted literature review on emissions pricing and Canadian food prices.

Prof. Megan Bailey Haskayne Business School, Calgary, AB, Canada 2023 - 2024

- Scraped NEI data; simulated New York coal phase-out using InMAP.
- Analyzed simulation results and prepared summary reports.

Prof. Arvind Magesan Department of Economics, Calgary, AB, Canada 2021 - 2022

- Scraped petition data for projects on political participation and government responsiveness.

Prof. Alexander Whalley 4POINT0, Calgary, AB, Canada 2019 - 2021

- Analyzed a near-universe firm-level dataset of Canadian companies (Aberdeen Data).
- Replicated empirical studies using the dataset and summarized results.

RA (full-time), Department of Economics, Dokuz Eylul University, Izmir, Turkey 2016 - 2019

- Supported teaching and research: tutorials, class material preparation, grading, and data analysis.

RA (full-time), Department of Management, Halic University, Istanbul, Turkey 2015 - 2016

- Supported teaching and research: tutorials, literature reviews, data collection and analysis.
